4. Note to Instructor

Assalamu Alaikum, Dr. Marini. I hope you are reading this in good health.

At this point, it probably won't take very long to realize that our project does not satisfy the conditions that you stated: that each person should contribute 2 pages (along with a certain degree of polish I was aspiring to).

I would like to apologize profusely on behalf of myself and my team. I know that submitting an incomplete project is not justified, but I'd like to explain a little bit as to why such a situation occurred. The main hurdle, I must admit, was the fact that each person had to contribute 2 pages. In a vacuum, that might not be much of a problem, but in the context of our website, it proved to be quite an issue.

You see, our website is a travels and tourism website, and in part 2, we didn't divide our work in terms of number of pages, but on functionality. This left no space for improvement but for more polish on the existing pages. We could not add anything more because we couldn't find anything that would be logically or conceptually coherent with our website.

On top of that, communication was strained because my team was living in different locations. Also dealing with varying courses, along with the barrage of work expected in the last week of the semester didn't help matters. I have to iterate, my team and I worked really hard, but the circumstances just weren't conducive to submitting a proper project (without, of course, sacrificing some of the consistency due to last-minute submission). These things further exacerbated the main issue.

I really hope that this doesn't leave a stain on the work my team has done so far.

Jazakillah Khair for all of your help this semester, Dr. Marini. We hope you'll forgive us for our shortcomings. May Allah accept from you and from us.
